

Privacy notice

Version: September 11, 2026

Who handles your information

Somewhere Right is provided by Bruno Amorim, who is responsible for the client information used in your engagement. You can contact me through our private Whop conversation, by email at brunopamorim39@gmail.com, or by mail at 8845 Lambert Court, Fishers, IN 46038, United States.

This notice covers my advisory work. Whop and the other providers below also have policies for the information they handle through their services.

Information used for your engagement

I receive your purchase and account details from Whop and the information you provide through intake, messages, calls, and feedback. I use these details to connect your intake to your purchase, understand your requirements, research locations, and deliver the service.

Your answers can include your current location, routines, work arrangements, housing budget, preferences, family needs, past experiences, and future plans. International searches also use citizenship and residence-permission information. Approximate income and net worth are optional; your stated budget guides the research.

I keep the confirmed brief, research notes, findings, and feedback needed to support the recommendations and included follow-up. If an essential requirement is missing, I'll ask about it before relying on an assumption.

Describe practical needs without sending financial account numbers, passport numbers, or medical records. Share information about other people only when needed to explain the search, and make sure you have their permission where required.

Tools and information sharing

- Whop handles purchases, private messages, and delivery. Its payment and account services have their own data practices. See Whop's privacy policy.
- Tally stores intake responses. Submission notifications containing your answers are also sent to my Google email account through Tally's email provider, SendGrid. See Tally's privacy policy.
- Automations on Whop uses purchase and account information to send the relevant intake link. It is a separate app connected to the business. The welcome workflow does not send it your Tally responses.
- Calendar Bookings and Google handle appointment details and meeting access if you book a call. Google also handles the email correspondence and intake notifications described above. See Google's privacy policy.
- ChatGPT, provided by OpenAI, helps me review your answers, prepare follow-up questions, research locations, and draft findings. Each client's work has a separate project. I review the work and make the recommendations. See OpenAI's privacy policy.

I store case records in these services and do not post them in a shared client community. Providers may process information in the United States and other countries. Their notices describe their processing locations and transfer arrangements.

I may share relevant records when required by law or when needed to resolve a payment dispute or obtain professional advice about the engagement.

Your choices

I do not sell your intake answers or use them to build advertising audiences. I will ask separately before publishing an identifiable client example or using your information to train a model for Somewhere Right.

You can explain sensitive requirements, such as accessibility needs, without providing a diagnosis or detailed personal history. Where explicit consent is needed to use sensitive information, I'll request it separately. You can withdraw that consent through Whop or email. I will explain if that changes which parts of your requirements I can assess.

Keeping your case on file

I keep information needed to complete the engagement and any unused follow-up. After delivery, I review inactive case records annually and remove duplicate working files and sensitive detail that are no longer needed.

The confirmed brief, final findings, and service history can remain on file to support unfinished work. If you ask me to keep a profile for future services, I retain the relevant preferences and past findings until you ask me to remove it or it no longer serves that purpose. I'll check older details with you before using them for a new engagement.

Purchase records and evidence of the work may be kept longer to meet accounting or legal obligations or resolve a dispute. The period depends on those obligations and whether a claim remains open. Deletion from active records does not necessarily remove provider backups immediately; providers follow their own backup and deletion schedules.

Access and privacy requests

Contact me to request access to your information, correct it, or ask for deletion. I may need to verify your identity. If I must retain some records, I'll explain the reason. Requests about information a provider holds for its own purposes may also need to go to that provider.

Where applicable privacy law provides them, you can also request a portable copy, restrict certain uses, withdraw consent, or appeal a decision about your request. I respond within the period required by the law that applies to your request. You can complain to the relevant privacy regulator, including the UK Information Commissioner's Office or your EU data protection authority, where applicable.

Where GDPR rules apply, the usual basis for engagement information is performing our contract. Recordkeeping can also meet legal obligations. Managing service records and resolving disputes serve legitimate business interests. Optional consent-based uses rely on your consent, which you can withdraw without affecting earlier lawful use.

You can object to uses based on legitimate interests. Contact me through Whop or email to explain your request.

Changes to this notice

I'll update the version date when this notice changes and tell affected clients about material changes. A new use that needs your consent will be presented separately.